Chiang Rai

Chiang Rai

Northernmost of Siam, Border of The Three Nations, Home of Lanna Culture, And Revered Wat Phrathat Doi Tung

Chiang Rai stands as the northernmost province of Thailand, nestled 829 kilometres away from the bustling capital of Bangkok, sprawling across an expanse of 11,678 square kilometres. Dominated by majestic mountains, it boasts fertile plains along the banks of several rivers.

Legend has it that Chiang Rai was founded by Phaya Mengrai, who later moved his seat of power to Chiang Mai. Following his departure, Phaya Chaisongkram, Phaya Mengrai's son, assumed control. Consequently, Chiang Rai became subservient to Chiang Mai and eventually dwindled into a ghost town as a consequence of war-induced migration southward.

In the year 1910, during the reign of King Rama V the Great, Chiang Rai was granted municipal status, becoming a "Mueang" administrative unit beneath "Monthon." It emerged as a pivotal center governing Chiang San, Fang, and Phayao. Subsequently, under the reign of King Rama VI, it was officially recognized as "Chiang Rai Province."

The statue of Phaya Mengrai the Great stands proudly at the Pho Khun Intersection, serving as a poignant tribute to his esteemed legacy. Crafted from noble bronze, this monument portrays him in regal attire, wielding a sword, and adorned with traditional Lanna regalia atop a majestic pedestal, towering approximately 3 metres high.

Phra Khun Mengrai, the 25th monarch of the Lua Changkharat Dynasty, was born in 1239 and died in Chiang Mai in 1311, as the offspring of Phraya Lao Meng and Phra Nang Thep Kham Khaeng, or Phra Nang Ua-ming Chom Mueang. He built the city of Chiang Rai on Doi Thong from the original foundation that used to be a city in 1262. Under his reign, Chiang Rai prospered, becoming the thriving heart of the Lanna Thai kingdom.

Wat Phra Singh

Mueang Chiang Rai, Chiang Rai

Wat Phra Singh, situated on Tha Luang Road near the Provincial Hall, originally housed the revered Phra Phuttha Sihing Buddha image, now enshrined at Wihan Lai Kham, Wat Phra Singh, in Chiang Mai. Legend has it that Chao Maha Phrom, younger brother of King Kue Na, ruler of Chiang Mai, brought the Phra Phuttha Sihing Buddha image from Kamphaeng Phet and commissioned its establishment in Chiang Mai. Phrachao Maha Phrom asked to borrow Phra Phuttha Sihing to be enshrined in Chiang Rai to cast replicas. Upon King Kue Na's passing, King Saen Mueang Ratchanadda ascended the throne in Chiang Mai, Chao Maha Phrom sought to claim Chiang Mai's throne and this led to a confrontation. King Saen Mueang Ratchanadda was able to protect the city during which Phra Phuttha Sihing Buddha image was returned to Chiang Mai.

The esteemed Wat Phra Singh also boasts replica of the Buddha's footprint on a stone slab, believed to have been crafted during King Mengrai the Great's reign. The temple's door panels, designed by Thawan Duchani, a National Artist in Visual Arts (Painting), depict elemental themes of earth, water, wind, and fire, and were sculpted by Sala Amnui Bua-ngam.

Within the temple grounds, visitors can admire the Phra Singh replica, a Lanna-style Buddha image in the attitude of Subduing Mara from the 21st Buddhist century. Commissioned by Chao Maha Phrom, ruler of Chiang Rai (younger brother of King Kue Na, ruler of Chiang Mai), this solid gold statue measures 37 centimetres in lap width and 66 centimetres high. Chao Maha Phrom borrowed the original Phra Phuttha Sihing Buddha image from Chiang Mai to serve as a model for the replica, enshrining it within the Phra Singh Hall.

Wat Phra Kaeo

Mueang Chiang Rai, Chiang Rai

Wat Phra Kaeo, located on Trairat Road in Wiang Subdistrict, is renowned for its association with the Emerald Buddha, also known as Phra Phuttha Maha Mani Rattana Patimakon (currently, it is enshrined at Wat Phra Si Rattana Satsadaram (Temple of the Emerald Buddha in Bangkok).

Legend has it that in 1354, during the reign of King Sam Fang Kaen, the ruler of Chiang Mai, lightning struck an abandoned pagoda, revealing a lacquered Buddha image. Later, the glazed coat cracked and this discovery was identified as the Emerald Buddha.

After the Emerald Buddha was relocated to Bangkok, the people of Chiang Rai commissioned a new Emerald Buddha statue, known as "Phra Yok Chiang Rai" (Phra Phuttha Rattana Konnawutiwat Anuson Mongkhon) or the Emerald Buddha of Chiang Rai. This significant event commemorated HRH the Princess Mother's 90th birthday on 21 October 1990. It was enshrined in "Ho Phra Yok Hall".

Key features within the temple include:

Phra Yok Hall A traditional 1-storey Lanna-style wooden structure that houses the revered " Phra Phuttha Rattana Konnawutiwat Anuson Mongkhon " or "Phra Yok Chiang Rai" Buddha image. The mural wall paintings depict the legend of the Emerald Buddha's discovery and the ceremonial procession to enshrine the statue in the temple on 19 October 1991.

Phra Ubosot: This ordination hall features Chiang Saen architecture with a low-sloping roof. Constructed in 1890, it houses the exquisite Phrachao Lan Thong, a seated Bronze Buddha image in the attitude of Subduing Mara. The Buddha's head is crowned with a lotus bud flame-like halo, hair curl, with short monastic robes, showcasing Thai Buddhist craftsmanship at its finest.

Phra Chedi: Situated behind Phra Ubosot, the octagonal-base pagoda is embellished with gold plating sheets arranged in nine overlapping tiers. The apex of the pagoda is capped with precious metals with gilded black lacquer technique.

Hong Luang Sangkaeo: A two-story museum seamlessly blending traditional Lanna architecture with reinforced concrete and teak wood. It serves as a showcase for significant Buddha images of the temple, including Phra Chao Tan Chai, Phra Phrot Lok, and Phra Phuttha Si Chiang Rai. Additionally, it exhibits cultural and religious artifacts related to Buddhism.

Wat Rong Khun, located in Pa O Don Chai Subdistrict, was once a modest and deteriorated temple. However, in 1997, Achan Chalermchai Kositpipat, a national artist renowned for his painting, envisioned its revival and redesign. The reconstruction, spanning an astonishing 13 years, drew inspiration from the nation, religion, and monarchy.

Inside the temple, visitors can explore:

Ubosot: Positioned atop a hill, access to the Ubosot is via a lengthy bridge, symbolizing the journey towards enlightenment. The pristine white structure is adorned with stunning hornlike finial on the roof ridge and toothlike ridges on the gable edges. The blue-silver mosaics and intricate designs adds to the mesmerizing appearance.

Its facade features unique depictions of serpent creatures, while inside, the walls are adorned with paintings by Achan Chalermchai.

Lord Ganesha Garden: This golden sanctuary, separated from the white Ubosot, hosts exhibitions related to Lord Ganesha and houses the golden Lord Ganesha Hall, surrounded by water.

The Art Cave: Crafted over six years, this cave with sculptured stalactites and stalagmites reflects Buddhist principles through meticulously crafted stone sculptures depicting postures of Buddha, scenes from Hell, and Nirvana's entry way. The pathway is illuminated with music and colorful lights.

Additionally, outside the temple, visitors can explore art galleries and exhibition rooms showcasing Achan Chalermchai Kositpipat's artworks.

Phrathat Chedi Luang

Chiang Saen, Chiang Rai

Phrathat Chedi Luang

Chiang Saen, Chiang Rai

Phrathat Chedi Luang is situated in Wiang Subdistrict, adjacent to the Chiang Saen National Museum. It is the oldest and largest temple in Chiang Saen, built during the 19th Buddhist century by Phrachao Saen Phu, the royal descendant of King Mengrai, the founder of the Lanna Kingdom. The purpose was to enshrine the Lord Buddha's relics. Subsequently, Phra Mueang Kaeo ordered the removal of the original chedi's base and the construction of a new one in 1515.

Interesting features within the temple include:

Phrathat Chedi Luang: The largest Lanna-style bell-shaped chedi in Chiang Saen, standing 88 metres tall with a base width of 24 metres. It has a tiered base resembling lotus petal on an octagonal base.

Wihan Luang: Located in front of the chedi, it is a large rectangular hall made of bricks with rounded columns. Currently, only the base, the rear wall with a Buddha image, and one of the front columns remain. A roof has been added to cover the original structure. Inside is enshrined the principle Buddha image Phra Chiang Saen Singha 1 and Phra Phuttha U-Khot, the Buddha image in the attitude of Subduing Mara.

Additionally, there are several other chedis and artifacts found; such as, sandstone Buddha images, base of a bronze Buddha image, votive tablets, Buddha image's heads and hands, as well as, numerous sculpted stucco celestial guardian's faces. Despite significant damage over the years, this archaeological site has been well restored to reflect its significance as a key temple in the history of the Chiang Saen Kingdom within the Lanna Thai Kingdom.

Key attractions within the temple precincts include:

Ubosot: An intricately carved wooden structure showcasing teak carvings that blend Lan Chang and Lanna architectural styles. Within resides the revered Phra Chiang Saen Singha 1 Buddha image, adorned with exquisite Buddhist features, while mural paintings depicting Buddhist narratives adorn the walls.

Maharat Phutthi Rangsan Hall: Housing statues of King Mengrai, royal insignias, and esteemed figures who visited the temple.

Wihan Luang Luang Pho Pha Ngao: Enshrining the revered Luang Pho Pha Ngao Buddha image discovered during the temple's renovation. This magnificent Buddha image exudes profound Buddhist symbolism, leading to the renaming of the temple from Wat Sop Kham to Wat Phrathat Pha Ngao in its honor.

Phrathat Pha Ngao: Perched atop a majestic rock summit resembling a stupa, Phrathat Pha Ngao offers serene shaded areas and panoramic vistas.

Phra Borommathat Phuttha Nimit Chedi: It stands atop a hill, a grand pagoda constructed as a protective enclosure for the remaining Phrathat Chet Yot, with only the base remaining intact, standing at a height of 5 metres. Inside, one finds the original Phrathat Chet Yot's base, adorned with murals recounting the rich historical tale of Princess Chamadevi. Outside, its fortress-like appearance invites exploration, allowing visitors to stroll around and enjoy the breathtaking surrounding scenery.

Skywalk Pha Ngao: Adjacent to the Phra Borommathat Phuttha Nimit Chedi lies the Skywalk Pha Ngao, a hexagonal cantilever bridge situated approximately 400 metres from the Mekong River. It provides access to and from the surrounding area of Phra Borommathat Phuttha Nimit Chedi. Crafted from glass and metal, this skywalk offers visitors a safe yet exhilarating experience, granting breathtaking views of the Mekong River and the picturesque landscape from both the Thai side and of Ban Don Sawan, Ton Phoeng District, Bokeo, Lao People's Democratic Republic.

Chiang Saen, Chiang Rai

Wat Pa Sak, situated in Wiang Subdistrict, stands as a significant ancient site in Chiang Saen. Renowned for its exquisite stucco craftsmanship dating back to the early Lanna period, it holds a prominent place in the region's historical heritage. According to chronicles, this temple was erected during the reign of King Saen Phu, the third monarch of the Mengrai dynasty. Its purpose was to enshrine the relics of the Lord Buddha's right medial malleolus. King Saen Phu commissioned the planting of teak trees extensively across the temple grounds, totaling up to 300 trees, which subsequently led to the temple being named as such.

Highlighted attractions within the temple complex include:

Wihan: Characterized by a rectangular layout with a front porch, the main hall boasts intricate stucco construction. It features eight stucco pillars and an elevated platform at the rear for the principle Buddha image.

Lanna-style Five-tiered Pagoda: This pagoda, retaining its pristine beauty, represents a harmonious fusion of Sukhothai, Pagan, and Hariphunchai artistic influences, which contributes to the unique features of Wat Pa Sak's principle stupa. Surrounding the pagoda on all four sides are alternating Buddha images and celestial pavilions. A stucco Buddha image in the attitude of disclosing the three world is enshrined here. The arched niche is adorned with exquisite decorative stucco motifs.

Doi Mae Salong

Mae Fa Luang, Chiang Rai

Doi Mae Salong, the location of Ban Santikhiri, formerly known as Mae Salong Nok, was once a settlement for former soldiers of the 93rd Chinese Division who migrated from the Republic of the Union of Myanmar. Spanning from December to February, the cool winter air brings forth the blooming of wild Himalayan cherry (Prunus cerasoides), the smallest variety of Sakura, with delicate pink and white blossoms adorning the path up Doi Mae Salong.

Interesting activities atop Doi Mae Salong include:

Tea Plantation Tours and Tea Production: Tea cultivation is the economic backbone of the community on Doi Mae Salong. Visitors can explore the tea plantations, tea roasting facilities, and numerous tea shops along the main road. They can purchase various types of tea and tea-making equipment. “Oolong Tea” is particularly renowned for its tender stems, delightful aroma, and exquisite taste. Visitors can also observe tea cultivation and harvesting methods, but prior appointments are necessary.

Phrathat Chedi Srinagarindra Sathit Maha Santikhiri

Mae Fa Luang, Chiang Rai

Phrathat Chedi Srinagarindra Sathit Maha Santikhiri

Mae Fa Luang, Chiang Rai

Situated atop Doi Mae Salong in Mae Salong Nok Subdistrict, Phrathat Chedi Srinagarindra Sathit Maha Santikhiri stands 1,500 metres above sea level, just 4 kilometres north of Ban Santikhiri. Completed in 1996, it was constructed to honor HRH Princess Srinagarindra (Somdet Ya).

This stupa, designed by Mom Rajawongse Mitrarun Kasemsri, an architect from the Bureau of the Royal Household, boasts a squared-based stupa in the Lanna architectural style rising 30 metres high. It is inspired by Phrathat Kopka from Wat Pa Sak in Chiang Saen District, Chiang Rai Province. The stupa consists of three levels: the first level houses a bronze statue of Her Royal Highness, adorned in full regalia; the second level contains relics of Her Royal Highness; and the third level holds sacred Buddha's relics.

Open daily 06.00-17.00 hrs.

Phra Tamnak Doi Tung

Mae Fa Luang, Chiang Rai

Phra Tamnak Doi Tung, formerly the residence where HRH Princess Srinagarindra (Somdet Ya) conducted her royal duties, showcases a fusion of Lanna architecture and Swiss chalet design. Its intricate wooden carvings, gabled roofs, and diverse window patterns, skillfully crafted by northern artisans, create a captivating ambiance. Surrounding the residence, a lush flower garden awaits, complemented by audio guides available in Thai and English for visitors to explore various points of interest.

Notable attractions near Phra Tamnak Doi Tung include:

Mae Fa Luang Garden: Situated in front of Phra Tamnak Doi Tung, this garden boasts a stunning array of winter blooms; such as, salvia, petunia, begonia, roses, Thorn apple, good luck plants and trees. Visitors can also admire more than 70 types of pergolas and sculptures by Misiem Yipintsoi.

Hall of Inspiration: This exhibition hall narrates the inspiring tales of each member of the Royal Family from the Mahidol lineage, reflecting the five kings' visionary contributions to enhancing the lives of the Thai populace. The hall comprises seven exhibition rooms.

Doi Chang Mub Viewpoint and Mae Fa Luang Botanical Garden: Nestled atop Doi Chang Mub along Phrathat Doi Tung Road, this viewpoint offers panoramic vistas, while the Mae Fa Luang Botanical Garden serves as a sanctuary for rare plant species, including wild orchids like Dendrobium infundibulum Lindl., Dendrobium draconis Rchb.f., and Canistel, as well as, Azalea from around the world. At the garden's entrance stands a small 3-metres stupa, "Doi Chang Mub Elephant," resembling an elephant resting on a large rock.

Additionally, vibrant events are held every Saturday, Sunday, and Buddhist holiday, from late December to January each year. These events feature ethnic cuisine, handicrafts, cultural performances, and art workshops.

Entrance fees:

- Combined ticket for four attractions (Phra Tamnak Doi Tung, Mae Fa Luang Garden, Hall of Inspiration, and Mae Fa Luang Botanical Garden): 220 baht
- Students, seniors aged 60 and above, and monks: 110 baht
- Separate tickets: 90 baht
